Chapter 461: The Exemption for Shadowkins and Dragonkins

A Sacred Exception

The decree of reclamation had swept across the multiverse, reclaiming celestial wings, black hearts, and dragon hearts from mortals upon death. However, Sung Jin-Woo, Ashborn, and Sung Su-Ho gathered once more in the heart of the Godverse to address a particular group — the Shadowkins and Dragonkins.

"They are not mere mortals," Sung Jin-Woo asserted, his golden eyes gleaming with wisdom. "They are an integral part of our forces, born of sacred essence, loyal to the balance we maintain."

Ashborn agreed, his radiant form glowing with celestial energy. "Their devotion and isolation have kept them pure, untouched by the ambitions of the mundane realms."

Sung Su-Ho, his draconic aura crackling with power, spoke firmly. "Their hearts are as eternal as their service. To reclaim them would dishonor their sacrifices."

The Decision

Thus, it was decreed by the Divine Triad that:

1. Shadowkins: These beings, born from the shadow essence of Sung Jin-Woo, would retain their black hearts and immortal status. Their shadowy wings remained a testament to their undying loyalty.

2. Dragonkins: The high dragons, wyverns, wyrms, and drakes created by Sung Su-Ho would keep their dragon hearts. Their fiery cores continued to burn with eternal vigor, ensuring their immortality and unmatched strength.

A Life of Seclusion

The Shadowkins and Dragonkins, unlike the ambitious mortals of the mundane realms, chose lives of seclusion:

Shadowkins: Dwelling in the shadow realms and the Shadowverse, they served as guardians, scholars, and warriors. Their existence was devoted to maintaining the balance between light and darkness.

Dragonkins: Residing in the skies, mountains, and hidden sanctuaries of the multiverse, they remained vigilant protectors of the realms, their fiery presence a deterrent to chaos.

Their loyalty and self-imposed isolation earned them the continued favor of the Divine Triad.

Immortal Guardians

Unlike the mortals whose lives were now bound by finite years, the Shadowkins and Dragonkins retained their immortality. They stood as eternal guardians, defenders of the multiverse, and living embodiments of the divine will.

Sung Jin-Woo, addressing the Shadowkins, declared: "You are the shadows that shield the light. Continue your watch, and your loyalty will never be forgotten."

Sung Su-Ho, with a roar that echoed across dimensions, commanded the Dragonkins: "Flames of eternity, keep burning! You are the protectors of realms, unmatched and undying."

A Harmonious Balance

The decree brought peace and clarity to the multiverse. The Shadowkins and Dragonkins, honored by the Divine Triad's trust, continued their sacred duties without fear of losing their divine gifts.

Thus, the multiverse thrived, with its guardians eternal and its balance maintained. The legacy of the Shadowkins and Dragonkins remained a shining testament to loyalty, service, and the unyielding favor of the Divine Triad.